Governor praises NECOP for developing 'drone jamming gun'

Dawn Report

KARACHI: Sindh Governor Kamran Tessori has appreciated the National Electronic Complex of Pakistan (NECOP) in developing indigenous modern defence technologies, including the advanced 'Drone Jamming Gun'.

According to a press release, Dr Sajid Baloch, the director general of the NECOP, presented the 'Drone Jamming Gun' to the governor.

Media reports said the gun, named Safrah, can intercept kamikaze drones from a distance of 1.5 kilometres, and disable them and their remote control. The gun was exhibited at the Pakistan International Maritime Expo & Conference at Karachi Expo Centre.

The governor, the press release said, was informed that the state-of-the-art device, equipped with cutting-edge technology, serves as a significant defensive and security tool that will further strengthen and enhance the overall security framework.

Mr Tessori appreciated NECOP's role and said that the adoption of advanced systems in line with national security requirements has become indispensable.

He added that such local institutions are playing a vital role in advancing Pakistan's journey toward defence self-reliance.

During the briefing, Dr Baloch informed the governor that this technology is in high demand globally, and remains competitive and distinguished in both quality and cost when compared with similar products from other countries.

Plan to link public transport surveillance with Safe City network

KARACHI: In a major step to enhance urban security, the Sindh government has decided to link the internal and external cameras installed in the Peoples Bus and upcoming EV Taxi Services with the Safe City network.

Chairing a meeting here on Thursday, Sindh's Senior Minister Sharjeel Inam Memon said that integrating the Intelligent Transport System (ITS) with the Safe City Project will not only make the public transport system safer but also enhance security and traffic management in urban areas through modern technology. He added once the cameras are integrated, security monitoring, traffic control, and public safety measures will significantly improve in Karachi and other major cities.

Mr Memon said the Sindh government is taking active steps to launch the modern EV Taxi Service in December to provide citizens with affordable, safe, and environmentally friendly travel options.

A delegation of investors met him to discuss the project. The meeting was also attended by Transport Secretary Asad Zamin, Sindh Mass Transit Authority Managing Director Kanwal Nizam Bhutto, and other officials. The delegates shared proposals on the project's structure, the establishment of charging stations, and operating models.

Speaking at the meeting, Mr Memon said that a modern transport system is urgently needed in Karachi. He noted that the government would launch the EV Taxi Service by December in Karachi and later expanded it to other major cities.

The minister also said that a Pink EV Taxi Service will be introduced exclusively for women to ensure safe and comfortable travel for female passengers. The taxis will feature advanced monitoring technology to maintain efficiency, transparency, and safety, he added. —Dawn Report

Meaningful fun and frolic

By Peerzada Salman

KARACHI: It is astonishing how Samuel Beckett's absurdist play Waiting for Godot has spawned so many theatrical pieces around the world. The search for meaning in life, the seemingly irrational conversation, the weird setting… all has become a trope that many theatre practitioners find interesting to work with.

French group Cirk Bi'Zart presented a play titled Boucan on Wednesday evening as part of the World Culture Festival organised by the Arts Council of Pakistan. It was dubbed 'circus art', which it was, but had more to it than met the eye.

Two things become immediately noteworthy as curtains go up; the set which gives off a vibe of an area occupied by not-so-wealthy people, and a beatboxing, hat-wearing man perched on a table. Once the beat begins to create a rhythmic pattern, a girl and two boys start making their presence felt. They are moving to the beat, in a clownish but well-rehearsed manner. They know their job well.

The story that is told is hard to put in words but can be interpreted visually, that is, what the audience is seeing is the constant unfolding of scenes, one after another, with the three characters (and occasionally the beat master) moving around the stage, hopping over each other, juggling balls, walking on bottles, stepping in and out of a door frame signifying time travel… and so on. The audience can construe each scene as it takes place. However, since there is no dialogue and the characters are trying to convey their message with gestures and buffoonery, there is much to laugh at which makes it hard to follow the storyline for connecting the dots. There's no need for it because on Wednesday, the audience laughed their hearts out and even engaged with the artists (the actors began to engage with them first) as if they're part of the play — a sign of a successful theatre project.

Boucan is a nice mix of circus and slapstick theatre which aims to create a spectacle of sorts. And it does.

The circus artists and the directors' names were: Laurie Roger, Remy Bombled and Jonah Katz. The beatboxer: Nasser Nash Chebbi.

government to improve education."

SELECT project

The chief minister also highlighted the broader SELECT Project, funded by the World Bank and GPE, focusing on improving early-grade literacy, transforming teaching practices, developing climate-resilient school infrastructure, and increasing student retention through SAMRS and capacity-building initiatives.

The $154.7 million programme covers 12 districts and aims to reduce learning poverty and promote school attendance, especially among girls.

The government announced plans to expand SAMRS province-wide via a structured training cascade beginning with master trainers and extending to cluster heads and all satellite schools.

"This is how we turn innovation into a legacy," the CM said.

Mr Shah reaffirmed that every reform undertaken by the Sindh government, from technological systems to infrastructure projects, is aimed at "ensuring no child is left behind."

"Our commitment to the children of Sindh is unwavering," he said. "Every child deserves to be present, engaged, and thriving. This is the future we are building together."

The launch ceremony concluded with a renewed pledge by the provincial government, development partners, and education stakeholders to strengthen education governance and deliver a modern, equitable, and technology-driven school system across Sindh.

Earlier, the chief minister, accompanied by the education minister, and Ms Amgaabazar, officially launched the SAMRS by clicking the computer button.
